Extra Millions For Satellites

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senators said Sunday they hope the $83,800,000 extra they recommended will get U.S. spy satellites orbiting over the Soviet Union a year earlier than now planned.

That should be in late 1962, a revised report by the Senate Appropriations Committee said in explaining a $10,384,897,000 defense money bill ready for Senate floor action this week.

Air Force spokesmen testified that unmanned military satellites, such as Samos, will be able to make detailed photographs of territory anywhere in the world and then transmit these back to ground stations on radio command.

The first experimental launching of a Samos is scheduled late this year from Point Arguello, Calif. The plan is to have the system in operation by 1963 or 1964.

Extra funds to speed the Samos satellite project were added in a last minute move by the full Appropriations Committee. A subcommittee had denied specific amounts by authorized transfer of up to 150 million dollars if there is a scientific breakthrough.

Senate experts said two other emergency funds—one for 150 million dollars cash and another for an equal transfer authority—also are available for pushing the military satellites.

Before these extra funds and authority were added, the big money bill carried some 333 million dollars for three military satellite research projects. The other two are the Discoverer—which has been put into orbit on test launchings—and the Midas, planned to report back instantly any ballistic missile launchings detected by its infrared sensors.

The Senate committee asked earliest possible development of an operational reconnaissance satellite, adding: "The early attainment of an operational capability with this system will provide the United States with the intelligence capability which is vitally needed to prevent surprise attack, continually assess the threat to our national security, and provide our strategic force with vital information."

The President bent low over the dark-eyed youngsters and chatted with them for a few moments. After the formal exchange of greetings between the President and the governor, Eisenhower returned to chat with the girls a second time.

Eisenhower, in his opening remarks, noted that this was his first visit to Alaska since it became the 49th state. He previously had been here, however, as an Army general.

Crowds estimated at between 30,000 and 35,000 lined downtown Anchorage streets as the President rode in a motorcade through the city.

The crowds were not particularly demonstrative, but the colorful turnout included hundreds of school children.

The President stood in his open car, flashed his famous smile and waved to the crowds.

The streets were lined with signs proclaiming: "Welcome Ike," "Hi Ike" and "Welcome Mr. Pres."

In his welcoming address at the air base, Gov. Egan noted that a big Democratic picnic was scheduled later in the day at Anchorage. But he said partisan politics had no part in the mission on which the President was bound, and that Alaskans and all Americans were united behind his efforts for peace.

An airline spokesman said that, during the period, it had operated 53 flights out of Idlewild, La Guardia and Newark, N. J. airports, and canceled 29 flights. The airline said a similar number of flight arrivals had been canceled during the same period.

Most of the passengers booked on canceled flights are being accommodated by other airlines, the spokesman added.

Ike In Alaska Capital

ANCHORAGE, Alaska (AP) — President Eisenhower arrived in sun-soaked Alaska Sunday and called the 49th state "no longer an arctic frontier" but a bridge to Asia whose people have demonstrated "what free men and women can accomplish."

The President's big jet transport plane landed at Elmendorf Air Force Base at 10:10 a.m. after a nonstop flight from Washington.

Ignored Tokyo In a 10-minute address of greeting, Eisenhower made no direct reference to the 15-day Far East goodwill mission, on which he departs from here early Monday. Nor did he refer to the Tokyo demonstrations against his visit to Japan.

But Democratic Gov. William A. Egan of Alaska told the President the prayers of the nation accompanied him on the 23,000-mile trip on which he will arrive at Tokyo June 19.

Earlier in the day, however, before leaving Washington, the President said the purpose of his mission was "to improve the climate of international understanding."

"Never, I believe, in the history of international affairs, has there been so massive a program of communications between government officials and between peoples. We should not let unpleasant incidents and sporadic turmoil, inspired by misled or hostile agents, dim for us the concrete and gratifying results. They have been to the great profit and to the great good of the entire world."

4,000 Greet Him An estimated 4,000 Alaskans greeted Eisenhower and his party at the Air Force base, six miles from downtown Anchorage.

The temperature was 56 degrees and the President doffed his felt hat to the bright sun as he alighted from the plane to shake hands with Gov. Egan and Lt. Gen. Frank A. Armstrong, commander in chief of Alaska armed forces.

Some clouds rimmed the snow-capped Chugach Mountain behind Anchorage, Alaska's largest city.

"My father," the President told the crowd, "was a growing boy when the Russian flag flew over Alaska. I never entered my head that as President of the United States I would someday urgently recommend statehood for Alaska and welcome it into the union."

Eisenhower called his sweeping flight from Washington, over some of Alaska's rugged expanses, "an index to North American growth in my lifetime."

Among the greeters who welcomed the President were two little Eskimo girls, Helen and Stella Mosquito of Anchorage, who were in the reception line to present a bouquet of roses to Mrs. John Eisenhower, the President's daughter-in-law.

The President bent low over the dark-eyed youngsters and chatted with them for a few moments. After the formal exchange of greetings between the President and the governor, Eisenhower returned to chat with the girls a second time.

Rockefeller said that his decision of last December not to be a candidate for the presidency still stands.

Rockefeller denied in a television interview that his recent critical statement concerning Vice President Richard M. Nixon and administration policies is any effort to stop Nixon's nomination.

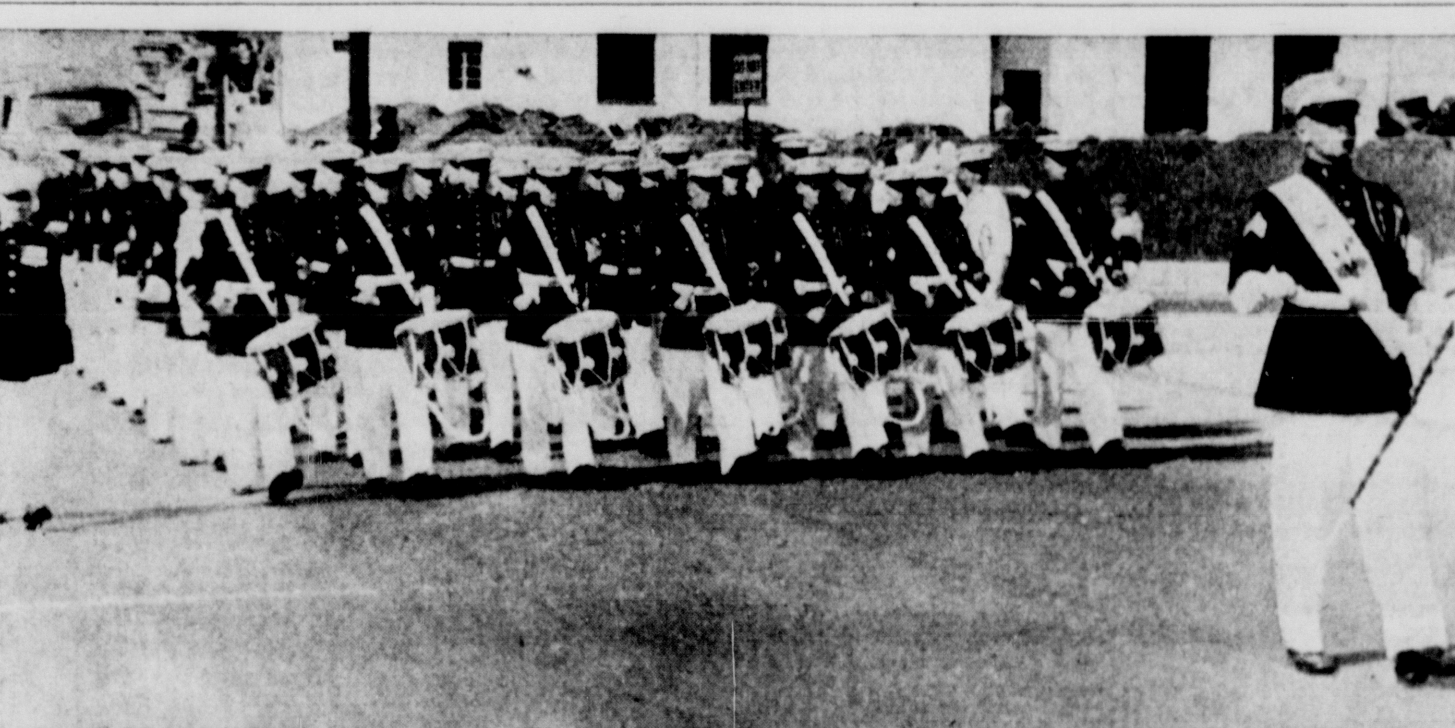

Rockefeller said he will support Nixon if he wins the Republican nomination, but it will be difficult for Nixon to carry New York State unless he speaks out on vital issues.

When it was suggested to him that "there have been rumors" of a change of position since last December, Rockefeller said his previous statement that "I am not and shall not be a candidate for nomination for the presidency" still stands.

Laurel Festival Climax

Thousands View Parade

THE 1960 POCONO Mountain Laurel Blossom Festival sparkled anew Saturday afternoon as scores of musical organizations, marching units, floats, and pretty girls paraded through the twin boroughs of Stroudsburg and East Stroudsburg.

The parade—considered one of the best ever held in the area—drew thousands of viewers who crowded the line of march. The East Stroudsburg Police Department estimated more than 3,000 people watched the parade in that city. Some 5,000 onlookers were estimated in Stroudsburg for a minimum of 8,000 spectators. Unofficial estimates were even higher.

The theme of the parade was "Fun In the Poconos." It was sponsored by the Pocono Mountains Vacation Bureau and staged by the Pocono Mountains Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Warm, pleasant weather greeted the paraders and spectators. The sun shone brightly and sparse, scattered clouds blended with the blue of the sky.

Although there were many highlights throughout the afternoon, a particular unit drew much praise. The unit was the famed U. S. Marine Corps Drum and Bugle Corps from Washington, D. C. The precision marchers with their colorful red, gold and blue uniforms, serenaded the spectators with "Cherry Pink" and various other numbers. The personnel numbered some 45 members.

Proceeding then Marine Corps unit was a four-man color squad from the Third Motor Transport Battalion, U. S. Marine Corps, Wyoming, Pa.

The parade—the first of the 1960 season—was filled with beautifully decorated motorized floats, marching units, sparkling music, numerous military outfits, Boy Scout groups, and high school marching units.

Glamor and sparkling beauty was everywhere to be found. The Pocono Mountains Laurel Blossom Festival Queen, Miss Kristen Ostergard, Centenary College headed the beauties. She was high atop the Pocono Mountains Vacation Bureau float.

The other lovelies, some 16 in number, rode in late model convertibles or atop various other floats.

Locally, the parade included various marching groups. Among these were the drum and bugle corps of George N. Kemp Post 346, or Falcons, of East Stroudsburg; the Thomas P. Lambert Post 2540, Veterans of Foreign Wars, Stroudsburg; the Stroud Union High School Band, and Boy Scout Troop 81, East Stroudsburg Methodist Church.

Other musical organizations were: the Emmaus Sentinels, of Emmaus; Blue Eagles, of Wind Gap; Silver Beavers, Beaver Meadows; Roseto Chieftains, Roseto; American Legion Post 29, Allentown and American Legion, Catsaqua. All were competitors in drum and bugle corps division.

The drill teams consisted of an all-girl unit entitled the Boleros Drill Team, Bangor Area Joint High School; color guard and drill team from Tobyhanna Signal Depot; Bethlehem Forest Rangers, Stange Cadet Corps, Altoona, and Company A, Pennsylvania National Guard, East Stroudsburg.

Various floats were entered in competition with emphasis on the theme of "Fun In the Poconos." Those participating were: Shawnee Inn, Shawnee-on-the-Hudson; Pocono Mountain Milk Dealers (dairies of Detrick, Faber, Lehigh Valley, Monroe Co., Co-Operative, and Penn-Del) $100.

Commie Tactics Worry Japanese Socialist Leader

TOKYO (AP) — A high Japanese political source said Monday the Communist party has seized control of the campaign against the U.S.-Japanese military alliance and the visit of President Eisenhower to Japan.

"Socialist Chairman Inejiro Asanuma is very worried," the source said. "The Communist party has recently changed its tactics and is advocating violence. We are not sure what they plan."

The Socialist and Communist parties and the big Red-tinted Sohyo Labor Federation are the leading organizations in the "People's Council against the U.S.-Japan Security Treaty."

The Council has directed the bitter opposition to the treaty, the Kishi government and the Eisenhower visit.

Security Increased The source, who would not be identified publicly but who is very close to upper circles in the Socialist party, voiced his warning of Communist control shortly after it was reported that greatly increased security measures are in the works to guard Eisenhower from the threat of massive leftist demonstrations.

The newspaper Japan Times said an original plan calling for the mobilization of 15,000 security police was scrapped because of the mobbing of White House press secretary James C. Hagerty in Tokyo last Friday. It said the new plans call for deploying 25,000 police to protect Eisenhower.

Government officials and police declined to comment on the report but there has been strong criticism of police failure to curb the violent demonstrations that have surged through Tokyo and other parts of Japan.

Tokyo's motorcycle police spent several hours Sunday rehearsing escort duties for the Eisenhower arrival June 19.

The English language Japan Times said 12,000 police will be lined along the 15-mile route from Tokyo's Haneda Airport to the Imperial Palace, with an additional 10,000 stationed at major traffic junctions.

Opportunity For Reds The motor parade from the airport poses the most critical phase of the reception, since the route gives Japan's violent left-wing elements their best possible chance to embarrass the President as they did Hagerty.

There also were reports that influential leaders in Japan's academic, press, cultural and entertainment fields will meet this week to launch a nationwide drive to give Eisenhower a rousing welcome.

Motorcycle police went through repeated dry runs Sunday for the Eisenhower arrival.

In businesslike fashion, 50 cops on shiny white motorcycles repeatedly made the 15-mile run between Haneda Airport and Emperor Hirohito's downtown palace in a protective wedge around an old black imperial limousine.

This critical trip, which Eisenhower is scheduled to make with the Emperor a week hence, was clocked at 38 minutes.

Foreign Ministry and imperial household officials took part in the rehearsal, staged as Eisenhower was flying to Anchorage, Alaska on the first leg of his 23,000-mile Far Eastern tour that will take him to the Philippines, Formosa, Japan and South Korea.

Red flags and other debris of a noisy Saturday demonstration by more than 150,000 leftists against Eisenhower and Prime Minister Nobusuke Kishi had been cleared from Tokyo streets.

Tokyo newspapers were urging the Japanese people to welcome Eisenhower warmly and courteously as a chief of state, regardless of their feelings toward Kishi's government.

But a rough week apparently lay ahead as Socialist Communists, and other leftist elements, scheduled a series of demonstrations in an effort to wreck the defense alliance between Japan and the United States.

Congress' Hopes For Quitting Dim

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional leaders scanned their calendar of unfinished business Sunday and gave up any hope of adjourning by July 4.

They began to wonder if Congress can close up shop before July 11, when the national political conventions start with the Democratic meeting in Los Angeles.

The spectre of a post-convention session is haunting legislators anxious to go home and campaign for re-election.

Because of the leisurely pace set during the past 5½ months, Congress faces the unpleasant prospect of longer daily sessions and fewer prolonged weekend holidays between now and adjournment.

The official "Status of Major Legislation, Second Session," lists only six legislative bills on which action has been taken since the second session of the 86th Congress convened last January. Two of these have become law and two were vetoed. The other two are hung up on the hooks of controversy.

The official listing shows enactment of a new civil rights bill and a measure extending the mutual assistance — foreign aid — program but not financing it.

The vetoed bills called for sewerage treatment grants and for federal help for depressed areas.

The two measures stymied because Senate and House can't see eye to eye provide for aid for school construction and for emergency financing for home building.

The House has passed 13 of the 14 regular annual appropriations bills, but only five of them have cleared the Senate. A stopgap bill providing temporary financing for federal agencies whose new funds are not approved by July 1 will be considered late this month.

MR. PRESIDENT

by Patrick and Vinmont

MILLARD FILLMORE

Born in Cayuga County, New York, January 7, 1800. He attended the country schools until he was 15 when he was bound out as an apprentice to learn the trade of a woolcarder. Four years later he began the study of law and taught school to earn his way. He was admitted to the bar in 1823.

At 29 he was a member of the New York Assembly and for eight years a member of Congress. In 1844 he was defeated for the governorship of New York. His election to State Controller of New York in 1847 prompted the Whigs to nominate him for Vice-President with Taylor.

The second Vice-President to be promoted by death, he became the thirteenth President of the United States on July 9, 1850 and served two years and eight months.

Slavery was the chief issue during his administration. He signed the Fugitive Slave Law. With a political minority in both houses of Congress, many wise measures he recommended failed to be adopted. After an unsuccessful effort to succeed himself he was nominated by both the Know-Nothing and Whig parties in the election of 1856 but was again defeated. He died in Buffalo on March 8, 1874, aged 74.

EDWARD EVERETT

Born in Dorchester, Massachusetts, 1794. Before entering politics as a Congressman, 1825-35, he had graduated from Harvard, studied for the pulpit and served as a minister before he was 20. He studied in Europe five years and became the first American to receive a Ph.D. degree from Göttingen. He then taught Greek literature at Harvard.

He served as Governor of Massachusetts, 1836-40, Minister to Great Britain, 1841-46, President of Harvard, 1846-49, Secretary of State under Fillmore and as a United States Senator, 1853-54. He was outstanding in his support of the national government during the Civil War and was in constant demand to speak at public meetings. He delivered the last of his great orations at Gettysburg at the consecration of the National Cemetery. He died in 1865.

MRS. MILLARD FILLMORE

Born in New York, in 1798, Abigail Powers, a teacher, was married at twenty-eight to Millard Fillmore. She continued her work until his career was established. In fragile health, as First Lady she was ably assisted by her lovely daughter, Abigail, well educated and musically talented. Dismayed at finding not a book in the mansion, they founded the first White House library with volumes of their own choosing. At informal literary or musical gatherings or at State functions, the Fillmore ladies presided with simple dignity and a warm, natural friendliness. Mrs. Fillmore died in 1853.

Dear Abby

Dear Abby: I have been teaching physics for 33 years and not only was your reply to "Dick" a pip, but it would have made Professor Einstein turn over in his grave.

"If a plane crashed in the desert and no living thing heard it, was a sound made?" Dick asked.

To this question, which has baffled philosophers and scientists for generations, you blithely reply, "Yes," without even batting an eyelash.

"Sound" — according to the physiological definition — "requires a receiver." Without it there is no "sound." Truly yours,

"Doc" (Cambridge, Mass.)

Dear Abby: I was surprised to read that "Dick" was having trouble with the question of sounds being reproduced by a plane crash in the desert. I asked this same question in my high school science class 20 years ago, and was soundly squelched by my teacher. This was before anybody would believe that matter and energy were convertible.

Good for Dick for raising the question and good for you for backing him up. I wouldn't have believed this old chestnut was still kicking around.

S. S. F., San Francisco

Dear Abby: The argument about whether or not there was a "sound" made if no one was around to hear it can easily be solved by using the proper word. What Dick wanted to know was not whether a sound was made ("sound" needs someone to hear it. In order to be termed "sound", Dick meant was a "noise" made? Yes, you were right. A noise was made. So call it a "noise" instead of a "sound" and settle it!

Physics Teacher,
Amarillo, Texas

Dear Abby: May I be the thousandth person to tell you that the question about "sound" has no answer?

If Dick couldn't find the answer in his physics book, written by experts who have spent their lives studying sound, vibrations and transmissions, I don't know why on earth the poor kid thought he could get the answer by writing to you. Why didn't you just say you didn't know?

A. L., Washington, D. C.

Dear Abby: You were wrong when you supported the student who said that whether anyone was around to hear a sound or not, it still was a sound. I will not attempt to explain this phenomenon as I barely understand it myself, but I know I am right.

O. F. (Yuma)

Dear Abby: I thought everybody knew that sound required three things: (1) An object to give off vibrations, or "noises," (2) A medium to transmit these vibrations, (3) A device capable of receiving or "hearing" these vibrations. By definition, then, a plane crashing in the desert with no living thing around to hear it, does not cause "sound."

W. W. H., Ellsworth, Maine

Stroud Union Senior Class Has Service

THE 69th ANNUAL baccalaureate services of the Stroud Union High School were held last night in the school auditorium.

Commencement exercises for the 131 members of the graduating class will be held at the school Tuesday night.

Musical selections were given by the high school band ensemble and the high school choir. The processional included "March From Four Episodes," by Morrissey.

The invocation was delivered by Rev. Charles H. Ruloff, of St. John's Lutheran Church and responsive reading by Rabbi Joshua Soddin, of Temple Israel.

Sermon By Rev. Carr

Rev. Joseph N. Carr Jr., of Zion United Church of Christ, Stroudsburg, delivered the baccalaureate sermon. Participating clergymen, in addition to Rev. Ruloff, Rabbi Soddin and Rev. Carr, were Rev. Charles A. Park, of Christ Episcopal Church and Rev. Roger C. Stinson, Stroudsburg Methodist Church. Rev. Park presented the Scripture lesson.

"Then Round About the Starry Throne" and "Bless the Lord, O My Soul" (Ippolitoff-Ivanoff) were sung by the high school choir following of which Rev. Stinson delivered the closing prayer and benediction.

Rev. Carr's sermon theme, "The Challenge to Be Useful" was likened to the episodes in the text of Moses and Hobab. "Moses said to Hobab, 'Come be our leader' but this failed. Then Moses said, Look, you are needed for leadership in the wilderness."

Rev. Carr pointed out that people say, in effect, challenge to be useful to whom? Useful to ourselves? This appears as an empty meaning.

To Fellowman

"Useful to whom? To fellowman?" Rev. Carr said: there is a lot of wisdom to this but we have to consider the utilitarian factor. Man treats man kindly, and in effect, won't take what he has.

"But we have to be useful to Almighty God," Rev. Carr pointed out. There are three points why this is so.

"First, the reason that He is the Creator; secondly, because God loves and has redeemed us; and thirdly, we must answer the call to respond with our love for useful service to the world which God loves."

In conclusion, Rev. Carr, reiterated, "just as Moses challenged Hobab to be useful, so God challenges you to be useful today."
